

The Magician

Traditional meaning:

This is a card about opportunity. You have everything you need right in front of you. You have power and raw material. You just need to get into action and use it. You have to take that first step to gather up the items and put them into motion.

My Interpretation:

An interesting card. I would think I'd love the magician. But he seems unenthused. He's surrounded by the swords and wands and cups and rods and his shoulders are a bit slumped. There's chimes, bubbly things, floating infinity symbols but he's not full of power. He's sort of resigned. Why doesn't he care more about all of this?
