

Knight of Rods

Traditional meaning:

There is a project ahead and you should go for it with enthusiasm! However, don't charge in without at least thinking a little first. Try to get a bit of planning in so your energy and enthusiasm go in a good direction. Be ready to react quickly.

My Interpretation:

The knight is looking off at a challenge in the distance, but he has a while before it comes to him. He's ready, but not aggressively so as in other cards. He's biding his time. His rod is leaning against his shoulder. He has a good helmet, but only a vest of armor. So he's not geared for a huge battle. There are waves around him, or maybe bubbly rock, providing some added protection.

His plume is almost cloud-like, so maybe some of the troubles are ones that he himself managed to cause?

Hmmm my interpretation is far less gung-ho than the typical one. Maybe that's a good heads-up to temper that high spirited energy.
