

Three of Rods

Traditional meaning:

Interestingly, others read this as a card of hope, of looking off into fantastic horizons with boundless opportunities. I don't see that. I see blankness in front of him ☹️. To me, the opportunities are right there with him and he's ignoring them. Hmmm.

My Interpretation:

The first thing to catch my eye are the three rods. They look very phallic, masculine, and strong. But the character doesn't see them. He looks between them. He has his back turned. While he has some armor on his head and shoulders, his entire back is practically bare. He is inviting an attack, almost. He gazes out into the blankness of space, not looking at anything.
